

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

I. CONCLUSION

After analyzing the novel, the researcher concludes that human actually has a close relationship with the environment. Human is a part of ecosystem in which environment include inside it. Absolutely, that relationship affects each other. In the development, humans tend to be destructive to the environment and bring damage to the environment.

Reflecting to the data analysis, the conclusion is firstly shaped to the relationship between the main character, Hugh Glass, and the environment or the nonhuman world. He tends to be indifferent with the environment. He believes that nature can provide what he needs and he keeps hunting and cutting the trees to support his life and his group's life. He damages the environment by shooting the animals and using it as his foods or his business with his company, Rocky Mountain Fur Company. It is pictured that the hunting stains the environment. Carcasses and some fell trees are scattered around the forest. There are also the buffalos' skins that are used as the boat by Glass and his fellows after Glass shoots down eleven buffalos with his rifle. However, there is no further deed that is expressed as protecting the environment. Thus, the relationship is disadvantageous.

Secondly, because of the relationship between Glass and the environment, there are some effects that appear in the book. The forest becomes stained because of
